It starts raining and you try to close the power boxes on the vehicle. Three windows close completely but one sticks about halfway up. You pull over, retrieve a piece of plastic from the trunk, and use it to cover the open area and prevent rainwater from entering the vehicle. What happens now? The source of the problem is a faulty regulator. Here's how you can fix or replace it. Open the car door and detach and remove the door panel. This will require three screws. The first screw is next to the door jamb and secures a small piece of plastic trim that overlaps the door panel. The second screw is behind the inside door handle lever housing. Use a flat screwdriver to dislodge the plastic housing surrounding the door handle lever before allowing you to access this screw. The third screw is located behind a small round access panel in the area of the door support. Use a small flathead screwdriver to dislodge this access panel and you will see the screw. After removing the three screws, pull the door panel away and release the plug to the power window so that you can remove the panel completely. Remove the bolt that attaches the regulator to the window channel and detachs the window glass from the regulator. Slide the glass to the closed position and secure it in place with duct tape by wrapping a few pieces of tape around the top of the door frame so that it attaches to both sides of the window. Drill out your four rivets that hold the regulator to the door frame. Remove the old controller and replace it with a new one by tracking the steps followed above. Remove duct tape from window glass, reconnect glass to the regulator's window channel, and reconnect the power window plug. When the power window is working properly, replace the door panel. But there are a lot of funding options available. And you may even be eligible for a special discount if you are a foreign service member or recent college degree. How can I fund a Mercedes-Benz? If you want to get behind the wheel of this luxury brand, the most obvious funding choice is to take out a loan with security. Although it takes time to compare lenders, this is likely the most cost-effective option and usually comes with the lowest prices. However, if you default on your payments, your lender can reverse your car to make up for the loss. Another option is an unsecured personal loan. This does not require you to use your car as a safety, but it generally has higher interest rates and is harder to get approved for. Prefer to go with the fastest option? Then you may want to consider financing or leasing directly through an authorized Mercedes-Benz dealer. Here are your two choices:Financing through Mercedes-Benz Financial Services. Getting funding on the dealership is one of the quickest and easiest options, although it may come with higher interest rates. The prices you are offered depend on which car you want to buy and where you live. Previously, Mercedes-Benz offered special financing agreements like 2.99% APR on C-Class sedans with terms ranging from two to six years.* Leasing through Mercedes-Benz Financial Services. If you want to upgrade your car in a few years, you can save money by lease. While deals vary depending on where you live, previous lease deals include the 2019 C 300 sedan for $429 per month for three years with $4,223 due to signing.* The local retailer you visit can also offer their own special promotions as well. As with any loan, the actual rates you qualify for will depend on your credit history and personal financial situation.*Prices as of January 22, 2019.Read our review of Mercedes-Benz Financial ServicesCompare car loan to finance a Mercedes-Benz Does Mercedes-Benz offer special discounts or programs? Mercedes-Benz is partnering with Military AutoSource (MAS) to offer exclusive discounts and funding to U.S. military personnel currently stationed overseas. MAS is working with USAA, Navy Federal and every other on-base credit union to offer financing to buy a new Mercedes-Benz. To take advantage of the program, visit your nearest on-base dealer. Mercedes-Benz also offers a Rising Stars program for recent graduates and current students. Offers vary by location, so contact your nearest retailer to find out what savings you're eligible for. In the past, retailers have offered no-down-payment financing options, discounted leases and competitive prices usually only offered to buyers with excellent credit. How much will a new Mercedes-Benz cost me? A new Mercedes-Benz will generally cost between $32,000 and $170,000, but you might be able to get a better price if you negotiate at the dealership. Yes, the new 2019 Mercedes-Benzes comes with a basic limited warranty that lasts for four years or or or miles — what occurs first. And the tires on your new vehicle are covered for either a year or 12,000 miles — whichever comes first. You can also get a hybrid battery limited warranty and emissions warranty depending on which model you buy and where you live. Bottom lineMercedes-Benz is known for being all about luxury — and its prices match. Fortunately, you have several different funding options to choose from, whether cost or speed are your top priorities. And overseas service members and recent college grads may even be able to get a special discount. Read our guide to car loans to learn more about the work and compare your options. FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS It depends on your budget and priorities. A new car will have the best warranty and will allow you to customize your extras, but a used car can be just as nice and save a significant amount of money. Many Mercedes-Benz dealers offer military discounts. The discount offered varies between retailers, so you need to contact your local dealer to find out more. You usually have anywhere from 30 to 60 days to find a car after getting pre-approved for a car loan. The exact time you have varies depending on the lender.
